

Today's paper | eEdition | Subscribe The Truth-O-Meter Latest print edition

Home | News | Politics | Sports | Entertainment | Money | Go Momma | Blogs | Video | Weather | Traffic | Classifieds | Jobs | Real Estate | Cars | Site Map

Search [input] Site Web Archives - back to 1987 Google Newspaper Archive - back to 1901 powered by Google go

Fingerprint unit fits right in at Pinellas County jail

By Keith Niebuhr, Times Staff Writer
In Print: Friday, April 17, 2009

Most emailed

- Pinellas Park High student stabbed to death over boyfriend, police say
- Tampa Bay Rays replica rings hit eBay immediately
- Is Florida ready for a real free market in homeowners insurance?
- St. Petersburg whacks $8.8 million from budget through layoffs, pay cuts and fewer perks
- Six prison guards forced out over videotaped beating of inmate

Public Safety

- 3-month-old boy dies in Clearwater traffic crash
- Grand jury indicts man in fatal shooting of Paris Whitehead-Hamilton, 8
- Fingerprint unit fits right in at Pinellas County jail
- Motorcycle, pickup collide in Clearwater
- Authorities release details of Safety Harbor man's child pornography videos

Special report

- 2009 Tampa Bay Rays All you need to get ready for the season, from stories to player profiles, schedule, stadium and ticket information, baseball cards and more.
- More special reports

Video report

- In Janet's Kitchen Ina Garten's macaroni and

Fingerprint technician Alan Beards cross-references fingerprints Tuesday at the Pinellas County Jail in Clearwater.

[DOUGLAS R. CLIFFORD | Times]

Clearwater police Officer Douglass Bailey was sent out late one recent night to check on a suspicious person seen wandering through downtown Clearwater.

Not far from the police station, he found a heavily intoxicated man who fit the description. When Bailey checked Ruben Rosario's records, he discovered the Clearwater resident was wanted for failing to appear in court on an old open container charge. Rosario was arrested and booked at the Pinellas County Jail.

Seventeen hours later, he was back on the streets. But his fingerprints remained at the jail.

During a subsequent computer search, a fingerprint technician made an intriguing discovery: The man's prints matched those collected by authorities at a handful of recent local burglaries.

Using that match, Clearwater police arrested the man again six days later. Today, Rosario is back in jail with a $12,500 bail, facing four felony burglary charges.

"That was a crime wave stop," said Bill Schade, who heads the county's fingerprint records department.

Story Tools

- E-mail this story
- Print this story
- Contact the editor
- Comment on this story

Social Bookmarking

- Digg
- Facebook
- Reddit
- Del.icio.us
- Stumbleupon
- Newsvine

ADVERTISEMENT

Subscribe to the Times

Click here for daily delivery of the St. Petersburg Times.

Email Newsletters

Be the first to know. Register for free breaking news alerts and morning headlines.

ADVERTISEMENT

Buy.com

Toshiba Laptops

BUY NOW

ADVERTISEMENT

Featured

cheese.
Hint: Increase the sauce by half and you'll have more delicious, creamy goodness for the noodles to soak up.

More video reports

Multimedia report

Top 10 John Williams themes

We gave music critic Sean Daly a simple task: Give us your Top 10 Williams themes of all time. Little did we realize that his choices would leave us shaking our heads and wondering, "How could he leave off????"

More multimedia reports

At the jail, technicians play an important role.

They take prints, fingers and palm, of everyone booked, from the minor offender to the repeat offender. With prints in hand, they check them against local and state prints using the Automated Fingerprint Identification System, which cost the Sheriff's Office about $1.5 million to install four years ago.

Fire crews battle four-alarm fire

One person dies after car flips on U.S. 19

Tornado and high winds damage Pasco County homes

"Within 30 minutes of your hands being on the machine, we know who you are," Schade said.

As part of their routine, technicians also pore through old case evidence compiled by the department's forensics team to look for matches. About 100 times a month, they get a hit, as they did with Rosario.

"Whether it leads to an arrest or not, it's a lead for detectives," Schade said. "A lot of times, a detective has to move on. But we don't. We never give up."

The technicians' workload is heavy; in 2008, 59,646 bookings were processed at the jail. Three of them are at the site around the clock, seven days a week.

"We're one of the few agencies doing this 24/7 at the local level," Schade said.

The technicians haven't always been stationed at the jail. Before March 2008, they worked across the street while deputies handled booking print duties.

Because of budget cuts, Sheriff Jim Coats thought it would better serve the department to give those deputies other duties and move 12 members of the 25-person fingerprint section to the jail. But the shift wasn't without some apprehension.

After all, being in direct contact with inmates was a new experience for the technicians.

Once assured their security was a priority, the fingerprinters were placed in a small office at the jail. Fifty-four weeks later, they are fixtures.

According to Schade, technicians better understand jail procedures and the booking process today, the identification process is faster than before, booking errors have declined and his fingerprinters are now considered part of the jail's team.

"This was one of the best decisions we could have made," Coats said. "The technology, along with the experience of the staff, has greatly increased law enforcement's ability to solve crimes."

Technicians are civilians, not deputies, but their work attire — baggy black pants, big boots and gray polo shirts with the sheriff's logo on the crest — suggests otherwise.

"We dress the part," said technician William Gerretz, 35, of St. Petersburg. "We've got to have some level of respect."

The technicians have added a human touch to the otherwise uncomfortable fingerprinting procedure. It is not their job to judge, they say.

"Being fingerprinted is not a pleasant thing done to you, but I think I have a way where I can put them at ease," said technician Alan Beards, 58, of New Port Richey. "I try to treat them with dignity and respect."

Doing so helps the process, they say. The calmer a person is, the better his or her prints are likely to be. And for the fingerprinters, that is vital.

"We," Beards said, "are not allowed to make a mistake."

Keith Niebuhr can be reached at kniebuhr@sptimes.com or (727) 445-4156.

[Last modified: Apr 16, 2009 08:29 PM]

Share your thoughts on this story

Read our guidelines for comments

First Name (only)

Comment (May be published online and/or in print)

Location

You have 250 characters left to comment.

Own
A Piece of History

Purchase museum-quality photographs from the St. Petersburg Times

Photos are available matted and framed and make great gifts!

Priced from $12.95

tampabay.com
Know it now.